CONTENT

Danny is the drummer in a punk rock band, and they have an important gig coming up: the graduation party, where they'll play for hundreds of people. What's more, the talent scout from one of the big recording labels has said he'll be there. The rock-n-roll olympics seems to be within reach! "The Ears" want to play the best concert of all times. Unfortunately, everything does not run according to plan. Danny has to drum with an injured hand and is in a rotten mood all day long. He suspects that his girlfriend Clarissa, who is also the lead singer for "The Ears", has started up a new band behind his back. He makes mistakes in every single song they play. But at the end of the concert there is a surprise for Danny. Clarissa has written a song - just for him. And she practiced it secretly with another band member. And the talent scout even has praise for them. He can't offer them a recording contract, but he does invite the band to make a demo recording in his studio.

Sequel to the successful novel "Buzzing in the Ears".
